FEATURES

42 Wii Will Rock You

Nintendo's new game machine has won over the world—and beat the pants off Sony and Microsoft. How a Japanese company founded 118 years ago as a maker of playing cards came to compete with the giants. BY JEFFREY M. O'BRIEN

54 A Pretext for Revenge

Hewlett-Packard says former VP Karl Kamb betrayed the company. He claims HP got his private phone records and spied on Dell. A story of intrigue, duplicity, and vindictive rage at one of the world's largest and most respected companies. BY NICHOLAS VARCHAVER

70 Carl Icahn: Shareholders Love Him, CEOs Loathe Him

How the Wall Street shakeup artist made $50 billion for investors in two years.

BY SHAWN TULLY

81 Boeing Prepares for Takeoff

After years of losing to Airbus, Boeing is flying high. CFO James Bell tells GEOFF COLVIN how the company did it.

FIRST

15 The Dog That Ate Detroit

Cerberus, largely unknown, is buying Chrysler and aspires to be the next GE.

BY KATIE BENNER AND ADAM LASHINSKY

17 Networks Gone Wild

Just when Madison Avenue had lost interest in the Discovery Channel, salvation came this spring—thanks to a snow leopard and talk-show diva Oprah Winfrey. BY DEVIN LEONARD

18 Stocks, Bonds, or Jets

The demand for new and slightly used aircraft is so strong (and the supply so limited) that hedge funds have begun trading Boeings and Airbuses as readily as they do crude-oil contracts. BY BARNEY GIMBEL

20 How I Work

Chef/restaurateur Nobu Matsuhisa relies on three cellphones—and a Miyakoya knife. INTERVIEW BY KATIE BENNER
